

Instructor: Date:

Learner: Regional Branch:

Program: Center:

CONTENT

- Let's Start! • Let's Explore! • Let's Practice! • Extension Activity • Target Words • Learning Points

Let's Start!

Have you read my newest blog?

Learning Outcome

Understand actions, events, and experiences in present, past or future and in spoken or written texts and in work and social contexts.

Ask your partner:

- Do you like to read blog posts? Why or why not?
- Would you like to be a blogger? Why or why not?
- If you were going to blog about a topic, what would the topic be? Why?

Can Do Statements

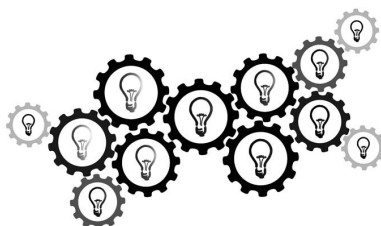

- I can express emotions and feelings.
- I can talk about the present result of events that started in the past in work and job issues.
- I can explain my ideas and opinions with precision.

Let's Explore!

Adam and Kristi talk about her last blog.

Instructions: Read the text aloud.

Adam: Hi Kristi! How's it going?

Kristi: Good thanks, I'm sorry to have kept you waiting. How have you been?

Adam: Not bad. I hardly ever see you. I imagine you have been sent to a lot of different places recently.

Kristi: Yes, I suppose they have decided to keep me busy.

Adam: I read your awesome blog about grammar. Very interesting!

Kristi: Thanks! When it comes to writers, grammar really separates the wheat from the chaff. Some reports seem to flow well and may appear easy to understand, while others seem more laborious to read. You need to write clearly to be successful in business. Often, the difference lies in the use of grammar.

Adam: That would be lies, L - I - E - S, or lays, L - A - Y - S?

Kristi: That would be L - I - E - S, because that is a different meaning of the verb to lie. It also means "to have a place."

Adam: Do you have any more ideas for blogs?

Kristi: Not yet, but I plan to have selected several more topics before our next staff meeting. I'm interested in inquiring about how English is changing due to international trade.

Adam: Really?

Kristi: All languages change, but I imagine English has earned a reputation for changing faster than other languages. For example, anymore is a word that used to only be used in negative sentences like I don't drink coffee anymore. Now, it's being used in positive sentences, like I've been drinking a lot of coffee anymore. Now, it also means something similar to lately.

Adam: Don't you think people should use correct English?

Kristi: There seems to have been some misunderstanding about that. I guess when people say "correct English", they have usually meant Standard English. Standard English is actually just one dialect of English. Every dialect has rules. These rules tell us what language is like rather than what it should be like. This is called the normative approach to grammar.

Adam: I reckon my old grammar teacher has not heard about that.

Kristi: Maybe she has, by now!

Let's Practice!

Ms. Moore and Kristi express emotions and feelings.

Instructions: Read the sentences and circle all the perfect infinitives. Practice saying the sentences aloud. Check your pronunciation with your instructor.

1. I'm sorry to have kept you waiting.
2. I'd have been happy to have attended the meeting last week.
3. There seems to have been some misunderstanding about that.
4. I plan to have selected several more topics before our next staff meeting.
5. I hope to have read more of your interesting blogs in the near future.

Let's Practice!

Kristi and Adam talk about the present result of events.

Instructions: Write the correct word from the Word Bank to complete each sentence. There are different possible answers. How does the meaning of the sentence change when you change the word? Compare your answers with your partner's.

Word Bank

suppose / imagine / reckon / guess

1. I _____ you have gone to a lot of different places recently.
2. I _____ they have decided to keep me busy.
3. I _____ English has earned a reputation for changing faster than other languages.
4. I _____ when people say "correct English", they have usually meant standard English.
5. I _____ my old grammar teacher has not heard about that.

Extension Activity

Write a blog on a topic you are interested in.

Instructions: Complete the following steps. Fill in the Self-Assessment.

- Think of a topic you are interested in.
- Read some blogs on that topic to get ideas.
- Discuss the topic with a partner to get more ideas.
- Write a 120- 150-word blog.
- Proofread your blog for accurate spelling and punctuation.
- Read your blog aloud.

Self-Assessment

Yes No

I read blogs.

☐ ☐

I discuss ideas for a blog.

☐ ☐

I write a blog on a topic.

☐ ☐

I read my blog aloud.

☐ ☐

Target Words

- laborious (adjective): very difficult
e.g. Some reports seem to flow well and may appear easy to understand, while others seem more laborious to read.
- separate the wheat from the chaff (expression): decide what is good and what is bad e.g. When it comes to writers, grammar really separates the wheat from the chaff.
- normative (adjective): related to how things are used in real life
e.g. This is called the normative approach to grammar.
- Standard English (noun): the form of English widely accepted as the correct form e.g. I guess when people say 'correct English', they have usually meant Standard English.
- to inquire (verb): to ask about e.g. I'm interested in inquiring into how English is changing due to international trade.

Learning Points

Perfect Infinitives

You use Perfect Infinitives in two ways:

1. After link verbs (seem and appear) to refer to a previous time period

For example:

There seems to have been some sort of mistake.

The matter appears to have been resolved.

1. After phrases expressing emotions and feelings

For example:

I'm sorry to have kept you waiting for so long.

She was happy to have met the hiring requirements.

The structure of the Perfect infinitive is:

verb + to have + past participle

Examples:

- I'm sorry to have kept you waiting.
- I plan to have selected several more topics before our next staff meeting.
- There seems to have been some misunderstanding about that.

Learning Points

Reporting and Commenting: The Present Perfect Tense

You can use the Present Perfect with verbs like reckon, imagine and suppose when you want to comment or report on what has been done.

When you use the Present Perfect, you refer to things that happened in the past but have a connection to the present.

This is useful when you talk about how things affect you and your current situation.

For example:

I reckon you have won the most valuable employee award.

I imagine you have seen from my résumé that I worked as a copy editor and proofreader at a campus newspaper, where I also sell advertising space.

I suppose you have established a great working relationship.

You use the past participle of the main verb in the Present Perfect tense.

Look at the chart for the past participles of some verbs:

Verb	Past Participle	Example
be	been	you have been
establish	established	you have established
help	helped	you have helped
see	seen	you have seen from my résumé...

Examples:

- All languages change, but I imagine English has earned a reputation for changing faster than other languages.
- I imagine you have been sent to a lot of different places recently.
- I suppose they have decided to keep me busy.

